

"Not Omaha Slayer"

Detectives Monday night also questioned Peery in the slaying of University of Omaha coed Carolyn Nevins.

But officers said a lie detector test cleared the Lincolnite of any connection with the case.

Two Omaha police detectives and a private detective employed by the University assisted with the questioning.

The apparent break in the Papillion and Lincoln cases came Monday morning when Officer Donald Smith noticed a car parked in northeast Lincoln.

Officer Smith, who was driving a cruiser car, followed the car when it drove away and radioed headquarters for assistance.

Car Found